TROPICAL STORM NOEL BACKGROUND

From the Miami Herald-October 30, 2007- Tropical Storm Noel turned toward South Florida late Monday after burying the Dominican Republic and Haiti under torrential rain that killed 20 people. No casualties were immediately reported in Haiti, but officials placed that country on "red alert" and searched for victims. The ultimate human cost could be high given the steep, deforested mountains on Hispaniola, the island shared by the two countries.

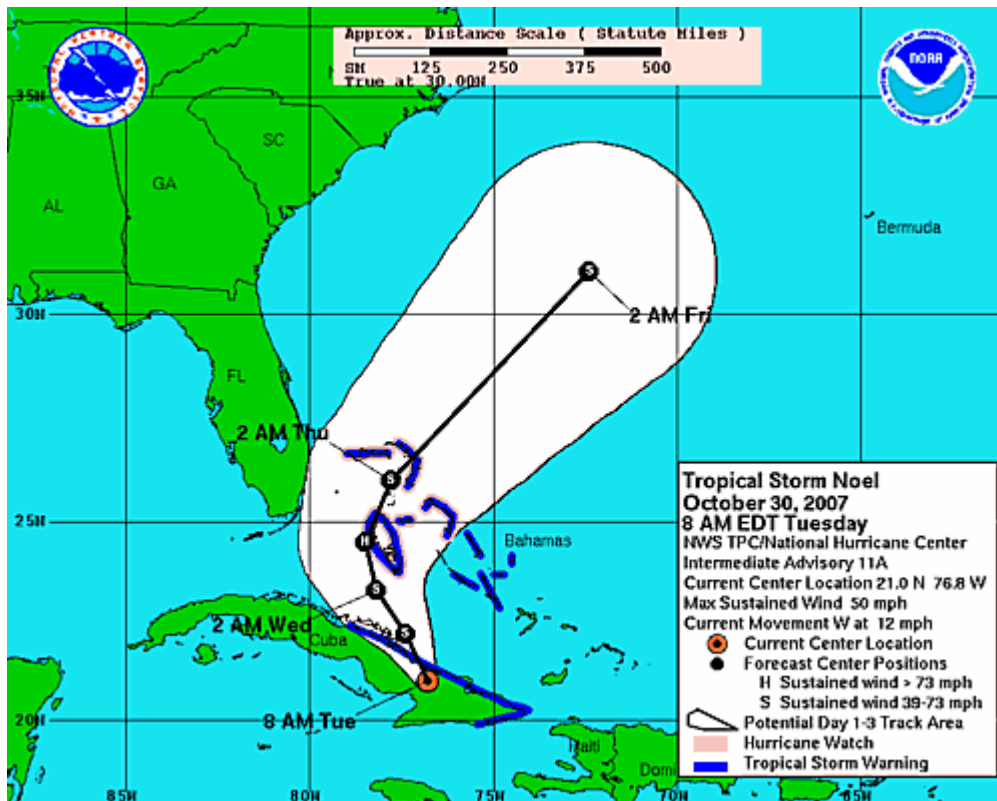

Landslides and floods were reported in both nations, with the Dominican Republic getting the worst of it. Thousands of people were evacuated, and nearly 700 homes were damaged. Manuel Antonio Luna Paulino, president of the Dominican Republic's National Emergency Commission, told The Associated Press that at least 20 people died and another 20 were missing.

The emergency management office said many roads were impassable and several buildings had collapsed. No immediate casualty reports came from Haiti, where government officials and United Nations peacekeepers kept a close eye on the slow-moving storm.

Workers for Haiti's civil protection agency were dispatched to Les Cayes in the south to investigate reports of flooding, and many residents were evacuated from Cabaret, north of Port-au-Prince, where floods killed 30 people earlier this month. Communications are limited even under the best of conditions in Haiti, and it could take days before officials learn about casualties and damage. In 2004, floods and landslides provoked by Tropical Storm Jeanne killed thousands of Haitians.

The mountains also disrupted Noel's course, causing its center to bypass Cuba and head straight toward the Bahamas -- and South Florida.
